

The smallest voice can be a mighty force!

Ukuleles for Sanity

Join us on August 29, 2004 for a massive ukulele protest at the Republican National Convention in New York City.

Our dream is to bring together as many ukulele-playing protestors as possible to march together in a Tsunami of Smallness...a Tidal wave of Tininess...a Deluge of Diminution...strumming and singing four-stringed songs of resistance and defiance against Bush, his comrades, and their administration.

To join this special Uke Sanity March, all that is required is a passion for justice and a ukulele in hand. Skill level is unimportant. Quality of the instrument is also unimportant. Strings would be nice.

But that's it. You don't even need to know how to play!

The ukulele has often been called "the easiest instrument in the world to learn." It is true that a novice can pick up the instrument, learn three simple chords, and be strumming and singing in all of five minutes. What better time to learn the ukulele than in the midst of politically like-minded ad-hoc instructors who are full of free advice?

This is more than a political action: it's a ukulele teach-in!

So go find that old uke in Grandma's attic and join us! Or bring Grandma to play the uke herself (she's got to be angry about the cost of her prescription meds!), and go find your own ukulele at a thrift store! If you already know how to play the uke, and you own more than one instrument, go find some friends and spread the joy!

If you're interested in participating and/or helping to organize the Uke Sanity March, email Tom Harker, The Ukulele Man, at tomharker@ukesanity.org
